Excerpt: . . . purchased in 1915, have run over 225, 000 miles each, and although they have been completely overhauled two or three times, they are still in good condition and giving very satisfactory service. It is believed that these are good for an additional 200, 000 miles. The buses of this line are entirely enclosed. They are electric-lighted and equipped with special heating devices connected with the exhaust of the motors. Throughout the United States buses are to be found running on inflexible schedules. For the most part these operate over city routes, where the conditions are not so severe; but here and there is to be found a line operating over rough roads and under the most adverse conditions. Particularly in mountainous districts, motor buses serve where railroads do not go. NoVember, 1919 passenger model, although there is a tendency to select the four-passenger coupe...
