The Crusaders sojourn will give us time to perfect our vagabondage. Coloman. O little man of great thoughts! Be it as you approve. My faith is in you. You are the spirit that walks beside me. Simon Szvela. My lord, to the Queen. You must please her today, that she may smile tonight. Coloman. Moving to the doors. She has been wakeful, so she tells me. He turns and looks steadily at Szvela: each trying to read the other s thoughts: then, abruptly. That third man must be well picked. With a sigh of inexpressible relief. I am unburdened at last! He opens the bronze doors and passes through. Szvela looks after him as if almost puzzled. Then he turns to Krisch. Simon...
