Thurman on His 77th Birthday Anniversary; Thursday Evening, November Thirteen, Eighteen Hundred and Ninety, at Columbus, Ohio His work aims to present in concise, yet comprehensive, form, the proceedings of the most conspicuous political banquet ever held in this country, and, probably, in the world. It is believed history does not anywhere record a grander testimonial to a private citizen in the quiet retirement of his home, and that the Old Roman Banquet bids fair to stand, for a long time to come, without a parallel. It is fitting, therefore, that the record be not intrusted to the fading memories of the happy and fortunate participants, but be gathered together and preserved in some permanent form, that all men in all future times may know how well Allen G. Thurman was loved, respected, and honored by his country men. It was the intention to have printed all regrets in full, but the occasion elicited such an unprecedentedly large number, that it became necessary to reduce some and merely to acknowledge others, in order not to increase the size of the book to an undesirable extent. The work of discrimination thus devolving upon the editor was an unusually delicate one, which he faintly would have avoided, but the results of which.
