Not illustrated. 1920 Excerpt: .and energy cost) of secondary importance only, while for many hours of operation per year conditions are reversed. That is, when the apparatus is much used, we can afford to buy expensive equipment in order to get low cost of operation, but where little used, cheap apparatus of comparatively low efficiency is the best. 88. Valuance.--If we take the reciprocal of the vestance per hour (Vh), we get by equation (65) $1 \text{ TRN.}, V = V_r \text{ CR} + \text{TaN}$ (66) We shall call (U) the valuance. It is a measure of the worth of the unit. When (2V), the number of hours of use, is zero, the valuance is zero, i.e., the unit is worthless (useless). The valuance increases as (N) increases, becoming a maximum when $N = 8760$, i.e., the apparatus is worth most (most useful) when it is used continually. 89. We shall now determine the vestances of various types of equipment for a normal year of 3000 hours, assuming a constant load during the entire period. In this way we can get a first approximation of the comparative values of such equipment. Further on, we shall consider more variable and exact conditions. 90. The Steam Engine.--From the previous chapter, we find that the first cost of a 100 h.p. low speed compound steam engine is \$3300. The efficiency with dry saturated steam at 100# initial steam pressure is 12 . The cost of oil, attendance, etc., is about \$0.05 per hour for this size of engine,...
