

Penses: Moral and Intellectual Objections to Christianity from a Multi-Disciplinary Point of View

By Brett Zimmerman Ph. D.

Createspace. Paperback. Book Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. Paperback. 234 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.5in. The term Penses is appropriated from a book of the same name (it translates from the French as Thoughts) by the philosopher Blaise Pascal. Pascal argues that a universe without God is terrifying and meaningless; he goes on to offer his famous perhaps infamous is a better wordwager, whereby he argues that belief in God is a good bet, an expedient decision. In lively and accessible prose, shot through and through with humour and satirical wit, Professor Zimmerman demolishes the choice for Christian faith by exploring some powerful moral and intellectual objections to religion. He does so partly through a look at history: the brutal outrages of the Protestant Reformation; the crimes of the Catholic Church with its thought-police, the Inquisition; the heart-breaking travesty of the Salem witchcraft delusion. He also discusses how Christianity has impeded the growth of scientific progress (the Galileo affair) and, through an interpretation of Nathaniel Hawthorne's romance-novel The Scarlet Letter, how it can be detrimental to a person's psychological health and sense of self-worth. While Penses destroys the argument for religious belief, Zimmerman does not leave the...
