This book is about: Integrated Health - HeartPath Practitioner Assessment and Intervention for the Trauma-Exposed Patient - was written to expose the deeper impact of trauma from a physical, mental, emotional, social, and spiritual perspective. Proper assessment and treatment must involve a whole person and a patient-centered approach to assist the trauma-exposed patient. It is also critical to have good communication and coordination of community services and all systems of care. Integrated health and collaboration are required to truly meet the needs of the patient and family who can be devastated by complex trauma. The HeartPath assessment and treatment philosophy is grounded in evidence-based narrative treatment. HeartPath utilizes thematic analysis to help the patient understand the deeper meaning and life purpose unique to his or her telling of the story. Guided imagery is a part of this healing process, and flows with the identified patterns and themes of each patient s told story. The individualized guided imagery process allows the inner heart to open to compassion and release all that does not serve the patient s life. The telling of the story is cathartic in and of itself. The story also represents testimonies of resilience and moves the patient from victim to survivor. This process is brief in nature, and the patient will report relief and functionality after three to five sessions (varies by individual). The HeartPath Practitioner works in all settings, however, may also be co-located in a patient-centered and integrated healthcare setting. The patient will be fully supported and empowered as they assist with the development of a self-management plan that is holistic...
