He was thinking of going to college, and some one suggested the University of Michigan, which he found to offer the opportunities that he desired. He was graduated from that institution in 1859, taught for a while, and then went into the war as a captain in the Twentieth Michigan. He was with Burnside at Fredericksburg; and when that commander led his Ninth Corps to the West, he followed its fortunes in Kentucky and before Vicksburg and at Knoxville, and in 1864, having risen in rank, he went through the bloody Wilderness campaign under his great namesake. He was admitted to the bar in 1866, and began practice with Governor Felch; he was recorder of Ann Arbor and also postmaster, and at the sessions of 1871 and 1873 he was a conspicuous member of the Legislature; from 1872 to 1880 he was a regent of...
