Romano-British Communities at Colne Fen, Earith (Hardback)

---

By Christopher Evans, Grahame Appleby, Sam Lucy

Cambridge Archaeological Unit, United Kingdom, 2013. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book. Charting a decade of intensive fieldwork along a 2km stretch of the Colne Fen, Earith fen-edge, the scope of these books is formidable and together they include the work of 65 contributing specialists (with a foreword by Ian Hodder). The fieldwork involved innovative methodologies, and groundbreaking scientific and micro-sampling studies are presented within the volumes. Portions of text are, moreover, avowedly experimental (e.g. intertextuality and antiquarian-informed perspectives) and it explores the long-term interplay of landscape process and (proto-) historicism. Appropriate to the practice of a comparative archaeology and the `challenge of numbers , throughout emphasis is given to multiple-scale settlement and spatial/distributional analyses. The scale of Volume II- the `Roman book - is even more daunting. Aside from including reports of earlier local excavations, it is primarily concerned with two major `set-piece sites. The one, Langdale Hale, was a mass-production supply farm; the other, The Camp Ground, a great inland barge-port settlement linked to the Car Dyke canal. Both reflect upon the potential role of the state and address crucial issues of `Romanization , with facets of their sequences markedly contrasting with the Stonea-engendered Fenland...
