Excerpt from Address to the People of Pennsylvania: Issued by Authority of the Association of Loyal Pennsylvanians, of Washington, D. C. September, 1864 Surely, the people are not willing to discard the teachings of the great leaders of parties in our past history for the teachings of the Woods, Vallandighams, and Woodwards of the present. What is a constitutional way of putting down the rebellion has never been disclosed by these When the committee of Vallandigham sympathizers waited on the President a year ago to ask that the sentence of banishment might be revoked, the President agreed to it on condition that they would endorse as true the proposition that there was a rebellion in the land, and that an army and a navy were constitutional means of putting it down, and by their refusal to do so, they implicitly declared their disbelief in its truth. They thought it was a constitutional way of putting down a whisky insurrection, a Shay rebellion, and the riot at Boston in the case of the fugitive slave Burns, on which occasion it is said that President Pierce stood in the telegraph office at Washington and almost worked the wires himself to assure the authorities that the whole military power of the nation should be used to enforce the fugitive slave law.
