Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Grape in Kansas Nearly all the cultivated grapes of the United States east of the Rocky mountains originated from various native species found growing wild by the early settlers of the country. Improvement of these wild grapes began by planting the seeds of the best of them and by cultivating and selecting the best of these seedlings. From the most promising of these cultivated vines seeds were again taken and planted, and so on until some of our cultivated varieties are many generations removed from the wild vine with which improvement started. As these seedling generations began to be cultivated they became more variable than the wild vines from which they descended, and improved forms appeared. Whenever a vine exhibited any particular merit it was propagated by means of cuttings, given a name, and became known as a cultivated variety. In some cases wild vines have been found possessing sufficient merit to warrant their being propagated and named as distinct varieties. Neosho and probably, also, Cynthiana and many others have been propagated directly from vines found growing wild in the woods. Improvement of our native grapes has progressed so rapidly in recent years that we now have more than 1000 named varieties in cultivation, though but few of these varieties are known to the average cultivator. Since our grapes may be grouped or classified according to the species from which they sprang, a brief description (from a horticultural rather than from a botanical standpoint) of the species represented by the varieties mentioned in this bulletin is here given. Our grapes are referred to the genus Vitis, comprising numerous species, among which the following will...
