Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Investigation and Development of Ground Waters: Thesis Because of the small quantity of ground water available and the expense of developing groundwater supplies, compared with surface water supplies, and because of the difficulty of studying the movements of water under the ground surface and out of sight, the branch of hydrology relating to ground waters has lagged far behind the science of stream flow. For municipal or domestic purposes, well waters may be more desirable than surface waters because of the better sanitary quality of the former. Ground waters are developed for irrigation only when the surface water supplies are inadequate. However, the importance of ground water supplies has increased with the improvements of pumping machinery, and with improvements in well sinking methods. Also, the back-to-the-land movement of the last decade has created a demand for irrigated lands, and this naturally has led to increased interest in pump irrigation.
