Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Clusters of Poetry One day a volume s bulky scope I probed For tempting knowledge of those distant orbs That roll secluded in the unknown heavens, Yet gleaned but little, and on that night I met in dream the things I had aspired. Before me stretched a mystic field of sand, O er which a sun of soothing radiance shone. Twas not in any way a desert s bleak And parched breast, but dotted here and there By springs of water, clear as crystallite, And round whose mossy banks and pebbled ways Grew trees on which sweet fruits and berries hung. And all at once there came a band of men, Such men as I had never seen before. Their size and strength was that of Hercules, With limb and body of a perfect cast. Their hair was of a flaxen blondish hue. Their eyes were cast in pure cerulean. And like a ripening peach their bodies tint, Velvet-smoothe, and showing health s perfection. They wore no clothes at all, but, purely nude, Ambled along with art majestic. Some carried plows, and others shouldered hoes, And coming near, within a few short steps Of where I stood, they stopped and laid their tools With care upon the sand, and then communed In clearest tones, anent the wisest course. In manner brief and sure they laid their plans, And those who carried plows arranged their blades, And pushed them thru the sand, and with such ease, That I could scarce believe my eyes, and stared As one who s told he ll live on earth forever. And those who wielded hoes filed after them. And straightway...
