Where are the looks so fond and free i f Tis not an Hymen, Sir, for me. The painter bow d--with this reply, f My colours an t, your Honour, dry When time has mellow d ev ry tint, Twill please you--or the deuce is in t I ll watch the happy change, and then Attend you with my piece again. In a few months the painter came With a performance--(still the fame:) - Take it away, --the husband cry d, . I have repeated cause to chide: Sir, you should all excesses shun; u This is a picture overdone! There s tod much ardour in that eye, . The tincture on the cheeks too high! The robes have a lascivious play, The attitude s too loosely gay. Friend, on the whole, this piece, for me, M Is too luxuriant--far too free. The painter thus-- The faults you find M Are form d in your capricious mind; To passion a devoted slave, The first directions, Sir, you gave; Possession has repell d the flame, Nor left a sentiment the same. My picture is defign d to prove The changes of precarious love. On the next stair-cafe rais d on high, M Regard it with a curious eye; As to the first; steps you proceed, l Tis an accomphsxd piece indeed! --But asyou. mount some paces higher, Is there a grace that.don t expire? So various is the human mihdj S-uch are the frailties...
