Excerpt from Agricultural College Bulletin, Vol. 6: East Lansing, Michigan, April, 1912 His department has supervision of the introduction of courses in agriculture in the public high schools, the preparation of courses of study for rural schools and high schools, and the preparation of teachers. Fifteen high schools are now giving courses in agriculture. These courses consist of one unit in each of the four high school grades, thus constituting an agricultural department parallel with the science department in the high school. Many more high schools are preparing to undertake this work in the near future, and it is probable that at least ten additional schools will be in operation for the year 1912 and 1913.
