Largely residual sandy loams, mixed in places with loessial silt. General farming, dairying, some trucking and small fruits. 8. Plat sandy area with numerous marshes. Original timber chiefly pine. Soils require very careful handling to produce good yields. Low agricultural value. 9. Areas of red clay. A strong productive soil, though somewhat difficult to handle. General farming and dairying. Alfalfa successful where drainage is adequate. Good grass land. Wisconsin stands for progress and achievement. Along the line of agriculture this state offers opportunities which are equaled by few, if any, of the other states in the Union. Wisconsin leads all other states in the development of the dairy industry. In 1909 there were 6,235 creameries in the United States and of these 1,000 were in Wisconsin. At the same time there were 3,846 cheese factories in the United States, of which 1,784...
