Excerpt from The Elements of Machine Design, Vol. 2: Chiefly on Engine Details The general data of the strength of materials and the laws relating to the dependence of dimensions on straining actions are given in Part I. But in the cases to which these laws are applied in Part I. The straining actions are generally steady or statical, or may for practical purposes be treated as being so. In the design of Transmissive Machinery, which is treated of in Part I., in addition to questions of strength, kinematical problems are those most commonly presented. In Part II which relates to machines the object of which is to supply mechanical energy for doing work, the parts of which move at varying speeds, and are subjected to varying forces of inertia which are too large to be neglected, dynamical principles find a more frequent application.
