Excerpt from Pediatrics, Vol. 1: Devoted to the Diseases of Children; Published Semi-Monthly With Illustrations; January 1st, 1896 She, the girl's mother, is French, and, as already mentioned, has hard hands like those of the patient. Of her sisters, three in number, one has a similar condition; the other two have not, and neither has her brother. The maternal grandmother of the patient had nothing of the kind; but the great grandmother (maternal), as well as her sister, had a similar condition. No further particulars could be elicited save the remark that there was a tradition that it had been in the family for generations, but that it affected only female members and only some of them; that it was only transmitted through the female members, and that it usually skipped a generation. In the present instance, however, this last peculiarity is absent, for both mother and daughter are affected.
