Excerpt from The Political Issues of the Time: A Speech by Hon. George W. McCrary, Secretary of War, Delivered at Keokuk, Iowa, September 10th, 1878 I have no sympathy With the disposition manifested in certain quarters to sneer at the claim that the Republican party is entitled to confidence and support because of the grand record it has made for itself and for the country in the past. I freely admit that we cannot stand upon that alone. I freely admit that we can neither win success nor deserve it unless we are right upon the issues of the present, but I insist that, with a party as with a man, character is an all-important thing. I know that we as a party must not only point backward with pride, but also forward with promise and hope; but still it remains true that before you can safely trust a party with the exercise of power you should be well assured of its patriotism, its devotion to the Constitution and the Union, - in a word, that it is inspired and controlled...
