Restraint: --Choice between the standing and recumbent positions must be decided by the probable complacency of the patient and the skill of the operator. For the standing position the horse is backed into a single stall and confined to the pillars with the dental halter. The head must be brought downward within easy reach. If the operation is resisted by forcible movements of the jaw a mouth speculum may be applied. The mouth speculum should, however, be avoided if possible, as it will interfere with the free use of the instruments. For the recumbent position the patient is placed in a dorso-lateral attitude with the mouth speculum adjusted and the head inclining upward. Anaesthesia is not advisable, owing to the greater danger of blood flowing into the trachea. Modus operandi: --The first requirement is to loosen the tooth. It is safe to assert that the tooth that cannot be loosened cannot be lifted from its cavity without fracture, or injury to the teeth upon which the fulcrum is placed. The loosening process is accomplished by wedging the molar separator into the interdentalia, first on one side, then on the other until it can be easily closed in the spaces. Torsion is then applied with the extracting forceps until the tooth is felt to be well loosened. Undue haste or the application of great force must be avoided and care must be taken to prevent fracture in a sudden movement of the head. The extractor is now...
