Such is the reverence in which it is held by Mohammedans, that they never touch it without performing certain ablutions; they will write verses from it on their banners, and on the walls of their mosques; and they place copies of it in boxes of gold or silver, which they carry with them as amulets or charms. The khalifs had it adorned with precious stones; and the Othman emperors still follow their example. Parts of it were printed from time to time by the great Arabic scholars of Europe, such as Erpenius, and Golius; and the whole has been frequently printed. We have now lying before us a beautifully printed copy from the press of Tauchnitz, the eminent printer at Leipsic, edited by Dr. Fluegel,...
