Amazon Top 100 Bestselling Novel A richly nuanced -- and smolderingly clever -- book about letting love shine in places where the past feels bigger than it needs to be. The cast of side characters range from quirky to mysterious, lending tremendous authenticity and depth to a romantic story that is so much more. A one-click must read! Julia Kent, New York Times and USA Today Bestselling Author. A heartbreaking tale of letting go and learning to love again. A jaw-dropping debut novel you have to read. - Helena Newbury, New York Times and USA Today Bestselling Author. How do you start over when you gave everything to one life, one plan, and lost it all Althea refuses to allow herself to love again. Imprisoned in grief at twenty-four after her husbands sudden death, shes convinced her heart died along with him. She spends her days honoring his memory by clinging to the legal career he helped her to build and to the remaining pieces linking them together. Griffens been running from his past. Despite success as an author and investigative journalist, hes been traveling through life on autopilot. For a decade, hes chosen perilous adventures and meaningless sex over the danger of any attachments. When he finally returns home to Pittsburgh, hes slammed by the awakened memories and regret hes spent years trying to escape. A chance encounter brings them together. Their instant desire for each other - and the bond they discover between them - shocks them both. Despite her best efforts, Althea cant resist Griffens charm or his intriguing proposition - if she agrees to a no-strings affair with him for the two weeks hes in town, he...
