Nathan Davett Cooper arrives in Europe on a German fishing boat instead of the Icelandic Charter flight on which he left New York three days earlier. He knows he should be dead as are the other 40 Texan college students who went down with the plane into the English Channel. He makes it to Munich to stay with his best buddy, Charlie, who is up for the draft and fears being sent to Vietnam. Charlie is an aspiring gonzo-journalist, reporting on the new militant student revolutionaries organizing in Europe and around the world to violently resist Americas War in Southeast Asia. Nates fateful journey is a huge eye-opener for the untraveled and naive 19 year-old. He learns dark secrets about his family and has to ponder his responsibility for the planes fatal fall into the cold waters off Normandy. Hes buffeted by Charlies struggles to decide if hes going to just report on the worldwide call to battle against Nixon and his warmongers, or if hes actually going to heed the call and commit body and soul, and declare war on his native land: the United States. Adding to the tension between the best buddies, Nate falls deeply in love, or rather lust, for Charlies flower-child girlfriend Custer. Nates torn by his friendship with Charlie, his guilt of having survived the flight that he somehow knew was doomed, his fidelity to God and country, and his awakening sexual desires for several different women who suddenly walk onto his lifes stage. The passions of lust and war are strong currents which toss the characters about as they struggle both internally and interacting with each other to find a way to safety, happiness and love....
