Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The George Washington University Bulletin, Vol. 4: June 1905 John Stuart Mill said, Whatever helps to shape the human being - to make the individual what he is, or hinder him from being what he is not - is part of his education. The form of government under which we live; the laws by which we are governed; the modes of social life by which we are environed the industrial, and the fine arts; even physical facts not dependent upon human will, as climate, soil, and local position, are determining factors in the formation of character and in the development of conduct. We may congratulate ourselves, therefore, that in environment we are supremely fortunate, and in many subjects of study hold a superior position. Extracts from an address delivered by President Needham at the Commencement of the Department of Arts and Sciences, May 31, 1905. We are entering upon a new era of our institutional life. The past, covering a period of over three-quarters of a century, has been honorable and is worthy of the respect and veneration of men; we have agreed to enter upon a new and a larger life; to make the institution a University in the broadest and best sense, and have reorganized upon a foundation, broad enough for all to stand upon who are interested in higher education at the National Capital. With a supreme purpose to make the University worthy of support, - the equal of the best institutions in our country, we turn our faces to-day, with courage and hope, toward the future.
