Excerpt: .threats which gained reality from the fact that the pursuing forces of the Regent had occupied Falkland, about twenty miles distant. Knox s comrades hesitated, but he himself insisted upon using the occasion which God in His mercy had offered. For three days he preached in the presence of the doctors and the magistrates, setting forth the corruption of the papistrie and the duty of ejecting buyers and sellers from the temple; and on June 14 the magistrates, with the consent of the Prior and Sub-prior, formally resolved to remove all monuments of idolatry, which also they did with expedition. Crucifixes, pictures and vestments were collected, and, with a sense of retributive justice, burnt on the spot of the martyrdom of Walter Myln.³ When the Archbishop, who had fled, reported the proceedings at Falkland, the Regent was disposed to follow advice given her by...
