Reviews

This pdf is wonderful. It really is written in simple terms instead of hard to understand. It's been developed in an exceedingly simple way and it is just after I finished reading this ebook in which it in fact modified me, altered the way in my opinion.

Relation to Confucian Ideals Why have not these ideals exercised a larger influence in China The answer is quite simple. The activities of the monks have been strenuously opposed by the Confucian state system. The philosopher, Chang Nan-hsian, a contemporary of Chu-Hsi, states concisely for us the differences between Confucianism and Buddhism in his comment on a passage in the Book of Records. Strong drink is a thing intended to be-used in offering sacrifices and entertaining guests, -such employment of it is what Heaven has prescribed. But men by their abuse of such drink come to lose their virtue and destroy their persons-such employment of it is what Heaven has annexed its terrors to. The Buddhists, hating the use of things where Heaven sends down its terrors, put away as well the use of them which Heaven has prescribed. For instance, in the use of meats and drinks, there is such a thing as wildly abusing and destroying the creatures of Heaven. The Buddhists, disliking this, confine themselves to a vegetable diet, while we only abjure wild abuse and destruction. In the use of clothes, again, there is such a thing as wasteful extravagance. The Buddhists, disliking this, will have no clothes but those of a dark and sad color, while we only condemn extravagance. They, further, through dislike of criminal connection between the sexes, would abolish the relation between husband and wife, while we denounce only the criminal connection. The Buddhists, disliking the excesses to which the evil desires of men...
