For the past ten years the economic entomology of the corn plant has been made a leading subject of investigation in this State by the official entomologist, and in the course of these original studies a large mass of published matter has been scanned and summarized. The present report has been prepared in the hope (1) of finally bringing to bear on the practice of the corn farmer in Illinois all the entomological matter that ought to affect his procedure, and (2) of so massing and condensing the data from which practical and theoretical conclusions are to be drawn as to make it unnecessary for the investigating entomologist to cover the same ground again. To the first end I have prepared descriptions and classifications of insect injuries to corn which I venture to hope will be found intelligible and practically useful to the actual tiller of the soil as well as to the economic entomologist; and secondly, I have incorporated with this, for the especial benefit of the entomologist, more detailed and thoroughgoing discussions of the insects themselves and of their life histories, habits, and injuries, together with descriptions of the species in all stages as yet recognized. This report is thus written from both the agricultural and the entomological standpoints. The corn insects now recognized as in some way and to some extent injurious to some part of the plant number 214 species, of which 18 are known to infest the seed, 27...
