It is built of old colored red brick, trimmed with stone and the exterior is severely restrained in execution, all embellishment being subordinated to the dominant note of a dignified simplicity which characterizes the structure from ground to roof-peak. In such a house one naturally expects to find furniture of contemporary mobiliary type and the promise of decorative consistency is fully carried out. In most cases, the closely related and chronologically adjacent William and Mary and Queen Anne styles may be blended and concurrently used with perfect propriety. This blending may be seen in the accompanying illustrations and the combination has been singularly felicitous as Sir. Charles Allom, whose American representatives carried out the interior decorations, is understood to be particularly in sympathy with...
