Excerpt: . see only the tops of eminences, and have no means of judging how extensive are the valleys or table-lands between. They do not undertake, therefore, to calculate distances. In speaking of these things, they turn the attention of their readers only to what they have seen themselves, i. e. the prominent parts of the landscape. So with John and other prophets. Great events--the prominences of history--are seen and described, but (for the most part at least) not the intervals of time between. In the case before us, the description of the general judgment comes after the description of the fall of Gog and Magog, because the writer, having now brought the church to a state of universal triumph and security, hastens to complete his work by pointing out the glorious rewards that will ensue, and the everlasting blessedness of the church triumphant. My...
