ROWMAN LITTLEFIELD, United States, 2016. Paperback. Condition: New. Reprint. Language: English . Brand New Book. America s Irish Catholic rich have long enjoyed the designation of F.I.F., or First Irish Family or Real Lace , as it delineates their place in the Irishtocracy , where names such as Cuddihy, Murray, Doheny, and McDonnell inspire respect and awe. Yet, in almost every case, their origins in this country were humble. Fleeing the Irish potato famine in the 1840s, they found themselves penniless in the slums of New York and Boston where they were regarded as invaders and a curse, humiliated by signs that said No Irish Need Apply and forced to accept jobs too degrading to be accepted by native and other immigrant populations. Nonetheless, they possessed one important advantage over other immigrants: they spoke the language. They were also, by nature and tradition, political. One of the F.I.F., Robert J. Cuddihy, was behind one of the great publishing stories of the twentieth century, the rise and fall of the Literary Digest. Another, Thomas E. Murray, though little schooled, possessed an engineering genius that led to his control of a number of electrical and other patents, second only to Thomas Edison. Still another, Edward Doheny, was a key figure in the great Teapot Dome scandal of the Harding years. We read of the F.I.F. s struggles to cling to their faith, and their determination to cope with the Irish curse : alcohol. In Real Lace Stephen Birmingham recounts the ultimate rags-to-riches story of the American Irish...
