History Center of San Luis Obispo County, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . The second edition of the new La Vista brings forth a compilation of articles devoted to the study and spread of San Luis Obispo history. The journal begins with a piece on a forgotten industry that took place in a now long-gone landmark. Historian Howard (Dick) Miller has opened a path to the past as he informs the reader of a small pond, and the invasive species that was placed there, in nineteenth century Morro Bay. His article introduces a pioneer named John Greening, whose story is set within the confines of international commerce, ecological naivety, and government influence. On June 25, 2016, the community of San Luis Obispo lost one of its most prolific historians. A man whose collection of work throughout his lifetime has aided the research of countless other historians and authors and inspired many to take on projects, thus perpetuating the love and continuation of history in our county. Loren Nicholson, founder and editor of the original La Vista series, passed away this past year. It was his good friend and fellow historian/author Joseph Carotenuti who has provided the reader with a glimpse into the fascinating life of this historian now gone. It is fair to say that William Randolph Hearst is one of the most intriguing figures of modern American history. His capacity as media mogul, quintessential playboy, and proponent of radical architecture are only parts of the machine that made one of the most influential men of his time. Researcher and author Thomas Brown has worked to provide the true account of the man during the time leading up to and during World War II. It is a piece that provides information...
