Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Notes on the Early History of Buenos Aires The same desire to reach the East animated succeeding explorers. The unexpected land discovered by Columbus was looked upon principally as a barrier on the road to Cathay, and efforts were made to find a passage through. The Portuguese explored the coast of Brazil in 1500. Solis, Chief Pilot of the King of Spain, may have discovered the Rio de la Plata in 1508, and certainly did in 1515. He got up as far as Martin Garcia, on which he buried the remains of his chief steward, recently deceased, whose name was given to the island. Solis landed on the western shore of the Parana and was killed by Indians. Magellan, a Portuguese acting under a commission from Spain, sailed around the Mar Dulce, as the Rio de la Plata was then called, in 1520, and continuing southward, found the Straits which bear his name. In 1526, Sebastian Cabot, an Englishman who succeeded Solis as Chief Pilot to the King of Spain, obtained a concession to explore the Straits of Magellan, but it is clear that his real intention was to find a way to Peru. About this time, stories had reached Spain from Panama about the reputed wealth of the Rey Blanco, a mythical potentate who subsequently attained reality in the person of the Inca. The conquest of Mexico a few years previously had shown that America was worth something on its own account, and as regards this Southern Continent, trade routes to the East became secondary to a path to the country of the Rey Blanco. Sebastian Cabot was the most eminent geographer and...
