By Martin Macmillan

Fastpencil. Paperback. Condition: New. 342 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 5.9in. x 1.0in. Very few Chinese names have become, as Shakespeares Henry V put it: Familiar in his mouth as household words to many westerners. Mao, Confucius, Yao Ming, Jackie Chan - there arent many. But that is about to change. Chinas in the midst of its once-in-a-decade political power transition. The Chinese princeling Xi Jinping seems set to assume the Presidency of China in March 2013. Xi Jinping (pronounced Shee Gin-ping) will lead China into its most important decade in modern times, and his actions will directly affect the nearly 1.4 billion people in China along with the remaining 6 or so billion non-Chinese on this planet as well. But thats just half the story. For the first time in modern history, the new President of China will be accompanied by a First Lady who is even more famous than her husband. Peng Liyuan (pronounced Pung Lee-yahn) has been a household name in China for thirty years. Often known as the Singing General, Peng Liyuan is a glamorous and gifted folk singer and operatic soprano as well as being a Major General in the Peoples Liberation Army. She is instantly...
