Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from A Case of So-Called Laryngeal Vertigo I desire to note here a peculiarity in Mr. H. s manner of coughing which struck me whenever I had occasion to see him for one of his periodical attacks of coughing. It seems as if he had acquired a habit of choking over his cough whenever the paroxysm is even moderately severe. The chin is depressed so as almost to touch the sternum, head and shoulders stoop forward, the face becomes turgid and red, the superficial veins swell out, and the cough consists of a deep inspiration, succeeded by a number of short, spasmodic expiratory movements follow ing each other in rapid succession, and differing only from per tussis in lacking the long sibilant inspiration which commonly ends the paroxysm in the latter. During April of this year Mr. H. Had an attack of influenza, and following this, after the febrile stage had passed, a very violent cough. At first there were all the symptoms of diffuse bronchial catarrh, sonorous rales over the entire chest, muco purulent expectoration, etc. Later on the rales gradually vanished, the expectoration diminished, and finally at the end of about ten days ceased altogether, but the cough remained more violent than ever, and assumed a more spasmodic character. The peculiar habit referred to above was still more marked. The cough came in paroxysms, during both day and night, seriously interfering with his sleep. It commenced with tickling in the region of the throat and larynx, became at once very violent, accompanied by turgidity of head and neck, lasting from some seconds to several minutes, and ended usually with the expectoration of a small lump of...
