It does not matter much what a man hates, provided he hates something. - The Note Books of Samuel Butler. Oh, the brute! he's simply slain my ankle! Sheila Farling limped painfully up the steps to the boat deck and leant against the rail, nursing the injured limb. Mr. Playfair, why don't you swear or offer to fetch arnica or kill the man or do something, instead of standing there and treating the whole thing as a joke! You wouldn't let me carry you upstairs, so it can't be very bad, said Denys Playfair, and I decline point-blank to kill a man when I've not even been introduced to him. It isn't done. Nobody loves me! Resting a hand on his shoulder she hobbled across to a seat and sat down. Tell Father Time to come and say good-bye when you see the end approaching. I'm afraid I'll miss you dreadfully, I'm the only thing he has to care for in the whole world. And I'm only nineteen! The pathos of it! Denys sat down beside her and began filling a...
