Mommy, Does This Have Bobka In It is a book of short, yet hilarious stories about four family members whose personalities seem to have come from different spectrums of the world. Kenny is a very serious dad; so serious that he is constantly shelling out a strange form of irony and sarcasm without even meaning to or knowing it, often described as the most serious funny person I know. Amanda is the Mom. She can find something hilarious in every situation and is not afraid to make fun of herself. She knows just how to capture life's magical moments (however embarrassing and disgusting they may be) in a series of words. Ten-year old Kyler is brilliantly smart. He never ceases to amaze. He is always trying to educate me on everything he loves, but there are some things that a mother just can't learn (like the difference between defense and offense). While being the brains of the family, Kyler is also very quiet, but somehow not shy. He just honestly doesn't give one hoot about what anybody thinks...
