Marched for Ringgold [Ringgold.] Crossed the Chickamaugee River at 11 o'clock on a foot log. The whole brigade had to cross on two-foot bridges that consisted of a single log across, we were over two hours in getting over. We marched within one mile of Ringgold and waited for dinner. After dinner we marched down through the town. The best of the town had been burned by Gen Thomas at the time of the Battle of Chickamaugee because the citizens fired at our troops from their buildings. All encamped at Tunnel Hill about one-and-one-half miles the other side of town. Our Regt. was on picket duty that night. -From the diary of Harvey Amasa Chapman Experience an unforgettable journey into the minds, hearts, and daily lives of a family who lived through the American Civil War. In over one hundred actual letters and a camp diary, the lives of author David Chapman's great-grandfather, Harvey Amasa Chapman, his family and friends are faithfully transcribed to capture every compelling detail. Their words reveal the...
