Excerpt from Western Hemisphere Agricultural Situation: Midyear Review; August, 1966 The 1966 outlook is for lower production of principal Hemisphere export commodities, including feedgrains, oilseeds, coffee, sugar, cotton, and dairy products. A slight rise is expected for other products, including rice, cocoa beans, bananas, and tobacco. Exports of grains, oilseeds, cattle, and dairy products were maintained near record levels during early 1966 and forward trade commitments appear unusually large, particularly for wheat. Available export supplies for many commodities are already restricted relative to demand. They may be reduced even further by year s end, contributing to a general upward pressure upon world prices. In contrast, stocks of other commodities-including coffee, sugar, and cotton-are expected to continue at high levels relative to demand throughout the year.
