Not illustrated. 1858 Excerpt: .Moon s cent, alt., Subtract from Declination, The learner is recommended to practise working examples of this kind by Table XIX., because such practice will be of service in working the lunar observation by the first method in the Epitome; and, besides, the method furnishes a greater degree of exactness in all cases, and there is no danger of being too exact. CASE VI. Capt. Smith, of the ship Solon, in latitude 37 16 north, and longitude 24 38 east, on the 10th day of May, 1860, by sea account, wishes to find the time of the moon s passing his meridian, to get an observation for latitude. By the Nautical Almanac, he finds the time of its meridian passage at Greenwich to be on the 9th day, 16h. 16m., and the hourly difference in the next column is 2m.11. His longitude east is in time 1h. 38m. 32sec., or about 1 hours to correct the time of passage for. Multiplying the 2TM. 11 by 1 gives 3m.5 to be subtracted from 16h. 16m., leaving 16h. 13m. nearly for the time, or it is 4h. 13m. in the morning of the 10th, by civil and sea account. If at that time he gets the altitude of the moon s upper limb on the meridian, 28 55 15 bearing south, and his eye be elevated 18 feet above water, what will he find his latitude? If the last case be wrought to the nearest minute only, and...
