Excerpt from A Century of Agricultural Progress: Being One Hundred Years History of the Bath and West of England Society, From Its Birth in 1777 to Its Centenary in 1877 Majesty immovable as a rock. Chatham, worn out by age and disease, was in retirement, from which he was soon to emerge, only to have the embers of his once fiery genius quenched for ever by the cold hand of death. His son had not yet obtained a seat in the House of Commons, neither had Sheridan, though both were destined shortly to enter its portals and to obtain therein imperishable fame. Who is Junius was a. Question that the curious of the day were trying to solve, but With no better success than subsequent investigators fascinated by the mystery of this incisive but bitter writer in the iron mask, whose declaration that his secret should perish with him was no vain boast it is a secret still, even though Lord E. Fitzmaurice has given us a life of his eminent ancestor, Lord Shelburne, who is supposed to have known more than anyone else about this much-discussed topic. Mingled with speculations respecting the identity of this great master of irony, whose letters against the King and his minions breathed a spirit that was leavening the popular sentiment, were fears and congratulations over the successes of Warren Hastings, who by force and fraud was laying the foundations of our Eastern Empire, over which her Majesty the Queen now rules as Empress.
