A couple on their way to Tucson for a family reunion approaches a deserted town. Car troubles force them to stop and with no cell service they walk through town in hopes that it isn't as abandoned as it seems. On their way they meet up with Sam, an elderly gentleman, and quite likely the last living resident. After using his phone to call for a tow the couple, Adam and Renee, find that they are stranded for the night and to pass the time they decide to explore. Sam warns against it and tells them that they should head out of town now before it's too late. Adam and Renee don't heed the warning and it isn't long before they find out what a grave mistake they've made. Death surrounds the town and not everything is as it seems. It will take every ounce of resolve they possess in order to survive until they can be rescued, and fate is not on their side. Four friends head up a dark and desolate road that cuts a winding path through overgrown woods on their way to a forgotten place that once prompted laughs and good times, but now only commands death and sorrow. When they pull into the weed-choked parking lot, Sierra has her doubts about the place, but she along with friends Brandon and Mark, are there to support their friend Kelly. Years ago her sister died brutally at the park and justice wasn't served. It's Kelly's hope to say goodbye to her sister and leave the past behind her. However, something still lives in the park, and the last thing it's seeking is a good time....
