Excerpt: .upon the throne, and before whom the Angels veil their faces. Still we would be as as Gods; and boldly overleap the pale of our nature and our capacities: and bitterly as we must rue the knowledge of evil, which this perverted ambition has introduced into the world, would proudly rise against-that deference to instruction, and obedience to authority, which become us as created and dependent beings, --comPelled by daily and hourly experience, to the humbling acknowledgement of ignorance and imbecility, ----and constantly discentsoVering the limits of our faculties, even in their application to the things that are around us. To the investigation of these, however, We have a fair encouragement in the observation, that it is seldom entirely unsuccessful; that knowledge is generally to be gained in proportion to our industry; and that the faculties which are the instruments of its acquisition, are...
