P., Minister of Finance in the House of Commons: Friday, 3rd May, 1895 And with these excuses, and these plati tudes, he marched on to the doleful tune of a two million deficit, a twenty-seven million drop in trade, a three-quarter of a million increase in expenditure, and an eight and a half million addition to the debt. In February, 1877, he came to the front again, and declared that the year 1875-76 was one of an exceedingly critical character, which would be long re membered in our financial history. Well it might be. Trade was diminishing, and went on to diminish. Revenue was de creasing, and gave no hepe or anticipation of rising again. The only things that were rising were the taxes and the debt, and they were rising with dizzy rapidity. Still, the Finance Minister at that time was hope ful. He pitched his song to a cheerful key, and said there was good reason for sup posing that we had seen probably the last of the...
