YMENOPTEROUS INSECTS are distinguished by the possession of four membranous wings. During flight, however, the posterior and anterior pair are hooked 1 together, giving their possessors V b the appearance of Dipterous or two-winged insects. The insects of this order are remarkable for the great development of their instinctive faculties, and their locomotive power is also very considerable. The families wherein we find the most familiar species are the FoRMicnxE (ants), VESProa: (wasps), and the Apld-e (bees). With the exception of the hive-bee, there is, perhaps, no insect whose history is more replete with interest than that of the Ants (Formicidm), to which family belong many foreign as well as native species, each, (especially the termites or white ants of Bananas) demanding careful study and attention. It is needful, however, at present, to confine our attention to our native species, whereof five have been described by Gould: --1, Formica-mfa (hill ant); 2, F. fuliginosa (jet ant); 3, F. rubra (red. ant); 4, F. flava (yellow ant); 5, F.fusca (small black ant). The community of ants, like that of the hive-bee, is composed of males, females, and neuters, which undergo regular transformations, the females continuing in the second or pupa state about six weeks, whilst the males remain only a month in this condition. De Geer has noticed that the...
