Making time? repeated Tom Rover as he gazed out of the car window at the telegraph poles flashing past. I should say we were, Sam! Why, we must be running sixty miles an hour! If we are not we are making pretty close to it, came from a third boy of the party in the parlor car. I think the engineer is trying to make up some of the time we lost at the last stop. That must be it, Dick, said Sam Rover. Gracious, how we are rocking! he added as the train rushed around a sharp curve and nearly threw him from his chair. I hope we get to Ashton on time, remarked Tom Rover. I want to take a look around the grounds before it gets dark. That s Tom, wanting to see it all before he sleeps! cried Sam Rover with a grin. You look out, Tom, that you don t get into disgrace the first thing, as you did when we went to Putnam Hall Don t you remember that giant firecracker, and how Josiah Crabtree locked you up in a cell for setting it off? Ugh! Will I ever forget it! groaned Tom, making a wry face. But I got the best of old Crabtree, didn t I? he continued, his face brightening. Wonder if we ll make as many friends at college as we did at Putnam Hall, remarked Dick Rover. Those were jolly times and no mistake! Think of the feasts, and the hazings, and the baseball and football, and the rackets with the Pornell students, and all that! Speaking of hazing, I heard that some of the...
