Hazleton: On Decoration Day, at Arlington, Virginia, May 29, 1880 Veterans OF the grand army OF the republic, ladies and gentlemen: There is in the human heart a natural veneration for all that is heroic and self-sacrificing in the history of the human race. The world is full of monuments which commemorate public and private Virtue. The mouldering sepulchre, consecrated by the undying eloquence of Pericles, is still associated with the most brilliant of all Victories in Athenian history. The peasants of the Tyrol think there is no monument in all the world like theirs and no memory half so dear as that of Andreas Hofer. Amidst the cantons of free Switzerland the hero of the old legende is to-day a bright reality; and in Scotland, from the borders to the crags of the highlands, the sword of Wallace still gleams and the memory of Bruce is still cherished. At Westminster Abbey the English people for eight centuries have crowned and buried their royal rulers, and within that gray old tomb of the aristocracy have been gathered through successive ages the illustrious remains of those who had built for themselves a still more enduring monument in learning and philosophy, in art and literature, and of those who had been the captains of armies, the leaders of parties, the oracles of senates and the ornaments of courts.
