C. Of Great Britain, During the Middle and Later Ages; (With Notes) John Evelyn, whose philosophical writings, and particularly his treatise on Forest-Trees, do such honour to his memory, was born at Wotton in Surry, the seat of his father Richard Evelyn, Esq. upon the 31st of October, 1620. He was descended from a very ancient and honourable family, which flourished originally in Shropshire; and was first settled at Wotton, in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. He was instructed in grammar and classical learning at the free-school at Lewes, in Sussex, from whence, in the year 1637, he was removed, and entered as a gentleman commoner at Baliol college, in Oxford. He remained there about three years, prosecuting his academical studies with great diligence; and then removed to the Middle Temple, in London, in order to add a competent knowledge of the laws of his country to his philological...
