Excerpt from War Work of the Bureau of Standards: April 1, 1921; Miscellaneous Publications of the Bureau of Standards Among the most important work which the Bureau performed during the war was the examination of all sorts of plans and inventions designed to be used by the Army and Navy. The Bureau, through its cooperation with numerous governmental organizations and committees, assisted in selecting from the great mass of ideas submitted, those which appeared to possess actual value. Members of the scientific staff served on these committees, thus maintaining the closest possible contact between the committee and the Bureau. A few particular cases of this assistance are described in the subsequent paragraphs, but many have necessarily been omitted. A great deal of the assistance which the Bureau, through its experts in all the fields of science, was able to render to our military forces came through oral advice and consultations. The value of this work can not even be estimated, and unfortunately most of it was not of a nature to become a part of the permanent records. Without doubt, a great deal of valuable time and money was often saved by the military service through informal conferences with members of the Bureau's staff.
