Excerpt from The Record of the Hampden-Sydney Alumni Association, Vol. 27: July 1953 The results are equally reassuring. Hampden-sydney graduates have received generous fellowships for study in the business field. They have entered leading Schools of Business Administration and done well. They have gone into large businesses and risen high in the organizations. They have managed their own businesses with success. We know of one recent graduate who went directly into a large and well known business institution in Richmond. There, competing with graduates of one of the best business schools in the country, he has shot ahead. The others had to learn the business methods of that particular concern, even as he did. But at the same time he had acquired from his education many other things that these men had neglected. Res i/Im loquitur. There is another hampden-sydney graduate, a little Older, in business for himself. He insists that the hampden-sydney plan of education should not be tampered with. Success in business, he says, depends mainly, not on business training, but on perspiration. Accountants can be readily hired; a good education...
