This book is the first comprehensive contribution to understanding the character of important societal transitions in Tanzania during Benjamin Mkapas presidency (1995-2005). The analyses of the trajectory of these transitions are conducted against the background of the development model of Tanzania's first president, Julius Nyerere (1961-1985), a model with lasting influence on the country. This approach enables an understanding of continuities and discontinuities in Tanzania over time in areas such as development strategy, ideology, agrarian-land, gender and forestry issues, economic liberalization, development assistance, corruption and political change. The period of Mkapas presidency is particularly important because it represents the first phase of Tanzania's multi-party political system. Mkapas government initially faced a gloomy economic situation. Although Mkapas crusade against corruption lost direction, his presidency was characterised by relatively high growth rates and a stable macro-economy. Rural and agrarian transitions were dominated by diversification rather than productivity growth and transformation. Rural attitudes in favour of land markets emerged only slowly but formal land disputes showed more respect for women's rights. Some space emerged for widening local participation in forest management, but rural dynamics was mainly found in trading settlements feeding on economic liberalization and artisanal mining. The transitions documented and analysed of Mkapas presidency, however, indicate only limited transformational change. Rural poverty is therefore likely to remain deep and the sustainability of economic development to be at risk in the future. Mkapa was, however, able to protect the legacy of peace and political stability of Nyerere, but there were nevertheless important challenges to the first multiparty elections and governance, and particularly in Zanzibar. The post-script (covering 2005-2010), indicates that the incumbent president, Jakaya Kikwete, has yet to prove that he can change...
