Excerpt from Flowering Trees of the Orient, 1926 In America, the display in Washington D. C. is notable. The collection there was presented to our nation during President Taft administration by the City of Tokio and planted along the Rive Drive near the Basin, where it is visited by every resident of Washington at least once during the Cherry Season. Many parks, especially the newer ones in the small cities, are featuring the Japanese Cherries, possibly because the management believes attention will be drawn to the project and more funds become available when something with a news value is planted. I am told that the plan has worked well. In one city the Rotary Club took the matter in hand and raised the money as the park funds were low.
